SMART SCOTCHMAN. How He Escaped from a Gang of Three-Card-Monte Men.

DECOYING A STRANGER TO ARLINGTON WITH THE OLD STORY OF STATUE-UNVEILING AT THAT PLACE-THE PLAN AND PLANNERS NEATLY FOILED.

[Washington Post.] Mr. Thomas J. Lipton is a wealthy whole sale provision-dealer of Glasgow, Scotland, who arrived in this city Tuesday morning. He came to this country a few days ago for purpose of purchasing provisions at Chicago and St. Louis. His visit here was merely one of curiosity to see the capital of the United States and to call upon the de facto President. Having paid his respects to Mr. Hayes and traversed the almost deserted halls of the Capitol, Mr. Lipton naturally turned his steps towards the building which stands as a monument of an Englishman'n generosity to this country, the Smithsonian Institute. While examining with interest the exhibits, Mr. Lipton ran against a young man, aged out twenty-two years, about five feet eight and a ball inches high, very respectably dressed, wearing a state-colored alpaca jacket, cloth pants and vest, straw hat, and displaying a heavy gold chain, to which was attached a hunting-case gold watch. Mr. Lipton did not, perhaps, notice all this at

at 1:15 o'clock at Arlington cemetery. It was then about noon, and they would just have time to get there. Mr. Hayes and the members of the Cabinet were to be present, besides Red Cloud and Spotted Tail. This took passage on either an Avenue or an F street car; Mr. Lipton cannot tell; prowent was a very circuitous one, and he was shown what was alleged to be the British minister's residence. At last, however, they reached Georgetown, and Mr. Lipton was taken down some street, probably High street, to the river. Here a little row-boat was in waiting, and the party took their places in it to be rowed across. Up the stream Mr. Lipton noticed a bridge (the Aqueduct), and a few hundred yards below him was a boat-house, which his guides had a few hundred yards below him was a boat-house, which his guides had a few hundred yards below him was a boat-house, which his guides had a few hundred yards below him was a boat-house, which his guides had a few hundred yards below him was a boat-house, which his guides house for whomen. thought Mr. Lipton, over marshes and rocks, and besides that there was as yet no crowd to be seen. He expressed these doubts to his companions. They were eager to reassure him. This was a short cut, they said, and the cemetery would soon be in sight. At last they reached the canal, which at this point crosses the river upon the Aqueduct bridge and proceeds to Alexandria.

scene. He came sanntering down the road with a linen duster on his arm. He was about forty-five years of age, five feet nine inches high, and rather stouter built than the "Major." He wore a square-cut jacket of some thin material, with cloth pants and vest. He represented himself to be a Kentucky horse-dealer, and was walking back to the city from visiting his sister, who lived a little way up the country. In a few minutes' conversation he learned that the party intended to go to Arlington.

"But this is impossible," he exciaimed.

This information appeared to greatly surprise Mr. Lipton's companions, who haited n their journey to consider the matter. In the mean time the alleged Kentuckian had grown friendly and was detailing how he had stopped a night or two since in Philadelphia and had been

VICTIMIZED AT A GAME OF CARDS. The trick was so sharp and ingenious that it had interested him, and he would be glad to show the party how it was done. Pulling out a pile of bills from his pocket, or at least what purported to be genuine greenbacks, he laid it down in a careless manner. A few cards followed, and of these he was far more careful than of his money. It would be no fun, he casually remarked, to play the game without any money wagered, and "Charlie" was induced to put down a few dollars. Of course he picked up the wrong card and lost. Then the Kentuckian bent the corner of a card a little, and very kindly showed "Charlie" how by this mark it might be distinguished. So for a game or two "Charlie" won. Then a suggestion was made that perhaps the gentleman might like to win some money also. Instantly Mr. Lipton saw the trap into which he had fallen. At the same time be noticed, what he had not observed before, that he was on the edge of the canal, standing between the water and the three mes, who had circled around him. He saw that unless he was strategic be would certainly be robbed and perhaps quickly pushed over into the canal and drowned. His plaus were quickly formed. He was perfectly willing to play, he said, but he had no money with him, and he would not think of playing for les than $500. The first assertion was very decidedly doubted. So Mr. Lipton TURNED ALL HIS POCKETS INSIDE OUT. His purse only contained his letters of credit and $1.75 was the highest amount of cash which could be found. One of the men suggested that he carried money in a best. Immediately Mr. Lipton opened his vest and showed that he did not wear such an article. But he took good care not to let an inside pocket of his vest, in which he had concealed a large sum of money, be seen. The crowd was evidently disappointed, so Mr. Liptou suggested that as be had $1,000 in his satchel at the hotel, it would be a good In his satchel at the hotel, it would be a good idea for the "Major" to accompany him to town and get it. He would not go, however, unless be could be assured that the Kentuckian would remain and play. To this the latter agreed, and placed his money in "Charlie's" hands as an assurance that he The latter agreed on account of delightful situation. All the way down the avenue the latter kept his eyes open for a "constable"—meaning a policeman. None were visible until the car reached the lower turn at the Treasury, just above Willard's, when an

and the two got out. As the Scotchman moved towards the policeman the swindler saw his plan, and in an instant was running as hard as he could in another direction. Matters were quickly explained to the officer, who started in pursuit. The chase however, was unsuccessful, and the swindler, unfortunately, escaped. Mr. Lipton reported his adventure to the authorities, who informed him that the gang was well known, but that when their schemes were carried out on Varginia soil they were out of the jurisdiction of the District. A sharp watch is, however, to be kept up for them, and any further attempt to molest strangers wil doubtless result in their arrest. Thirdly, It is evident the Bombay Sepoys were of such inferior physique that they could not stand up to the stalwart Ghazis, who bore down upon them, sword in hand. Giving way to sudden panic they "mobbed" the veteran Sixtysixth regiment and caused the almost total annihilation of that fine corps. The cavalry do not seem to have coonerated with much effect. The suffering of the troops in their uninterrupted flight over forty miles must have been terrible, for the present season is the hottest time of the year there and they had been fighting and marching without food or water for twenty-four hours."
